Vertical Communications Unveils Wave IP Edge 5000i-4 Phone

Cost-effective Devices Deliver Sophisticated IP Features to the Small Business Market

Santa Clara, Calif., December 19, 2013—Vertical Communications®, a leading provider of business communications software and solutions, today announced the availability of its new Edge 5000i-4 phone, the company's latest addition to its Wave IP line of unified communications handsets. Suitable for both IP PBX and Centrex environments, the Edge 5000i-4 offers a range of unified communications features at a competitive price, making it a practical solution for small- and medium-size businesses.

The Edge 5000i-4 entry-level model features a two-line graphical display, four programmable buttons and four-way navigation that guides users through a host of call features and functions. Its remote capabilities and intuitive administration allows small- and medium-size companies to easily configure and manage the device.

"Vertical is recognized for offering powerful, customer-focused communications technology that meets the sophisticated needs of small businesses," noted Rick Dell, chief operating officer at Vertical Communications. "The Edge 5000i-4 continues our company's philosophy in addressing this market. Its intelligent design, advanced features and intuitive interfaces can help customers increase productivity and efficiency, at an affordable price."
